

A voice from the youth of America; I see no reason for conglomerate companies to own radio stations in every city and town in America. The only benefit to doing this would be for social engineering; playing the same songs to the same people in an attempt to increase overall sales. Homogenizing society is not a step in the right direction, and major record labels/RIAA who inevitably control radio (just as MPAA controls movie content) will not relenquish control over society from one voice, such as my own, simply because of the mass of profits it generates. A governing body needs to intervene and take action. I am a voice in America and I will be heard in some way.
